Light therapy has been shown to be effective in the treatment of seasonal affective disorder (SAD), a type of depression that occurs at certain times of the year. The treatment involves exposure to bright light, which can help to regulate the body's circadian rhythm and improve mood. Studies have shown that light therapy can be as effective as antidepressant medication in treating SAD, and it is often used in combination with other treatments. The treatment is typically done in a controlled environment, such as a light box, and the duration of exposure is usually between 30 and 60 minutes per day. It is important to consult with a healthcare professional before starting light therapy, as it may not be suitable for everyone and there are some potential risks.
