USS Golet (SS-361)

Lt. James S. Clark took command of GOLET and departed Midway 28 May 1944 to patrol off northern Honshu, Japan. A door of silence closed behind her and GOLET was never heard from again. She had been scheduled to depart her area on 5 July and expected at Midway about 12 or 13 July. She failed to acknowledge a message sent her on 9 July and was presumed lost 26 July 1944. Japanese antisubmarine records available after the war revealed that GOLET was the probable victim of a Japanese antisubmarine attack made 14 June 1944 in latitude 41-04' North; longitude 14-30' East. These records mention that the attack brought up corks, rafts, and other debris and a heavy pool of oil, all evidence of the sinking of a submarine.
